

Don't Frighten Your Workforce!

With Scary Employee Experiences

Poor employee experience can haunt your workforce – making it difficult to recruit and retain top talent. Here are a few tips to make sure the experience your organization is providing is a pleasant one:

Scary Experience: Ominous and Outdated Onboarding

51% of employees say they've been tempted to leave a new job due to a negative onboarding experience.

Eliminate outdated onboarding with modern technology that empowers employees to fill out forms and elect benefits digitally.

Scary Experience: Worrisome Approach to Wellness

65% of employees think employers should offer a comprehensive wellness program for physical, mental and financial well-being.

Hiring a Chief Wellness Officer to develop and manage a complete wellness program can lead to better engagement and reduce employee burnout.

Scary Experience: Lack of Learning Opportunities

55% of employees want their employer to provide more education opportunities through an internal learning management system.

Develop talent internally with technology that offers self-paced microlearning sessions and role-specific training.

Scary Experience: Frightening Support for Social Good

61% of employees are either extremely likely or probable to take advantage of charity donations deducted straight from their paychecks.

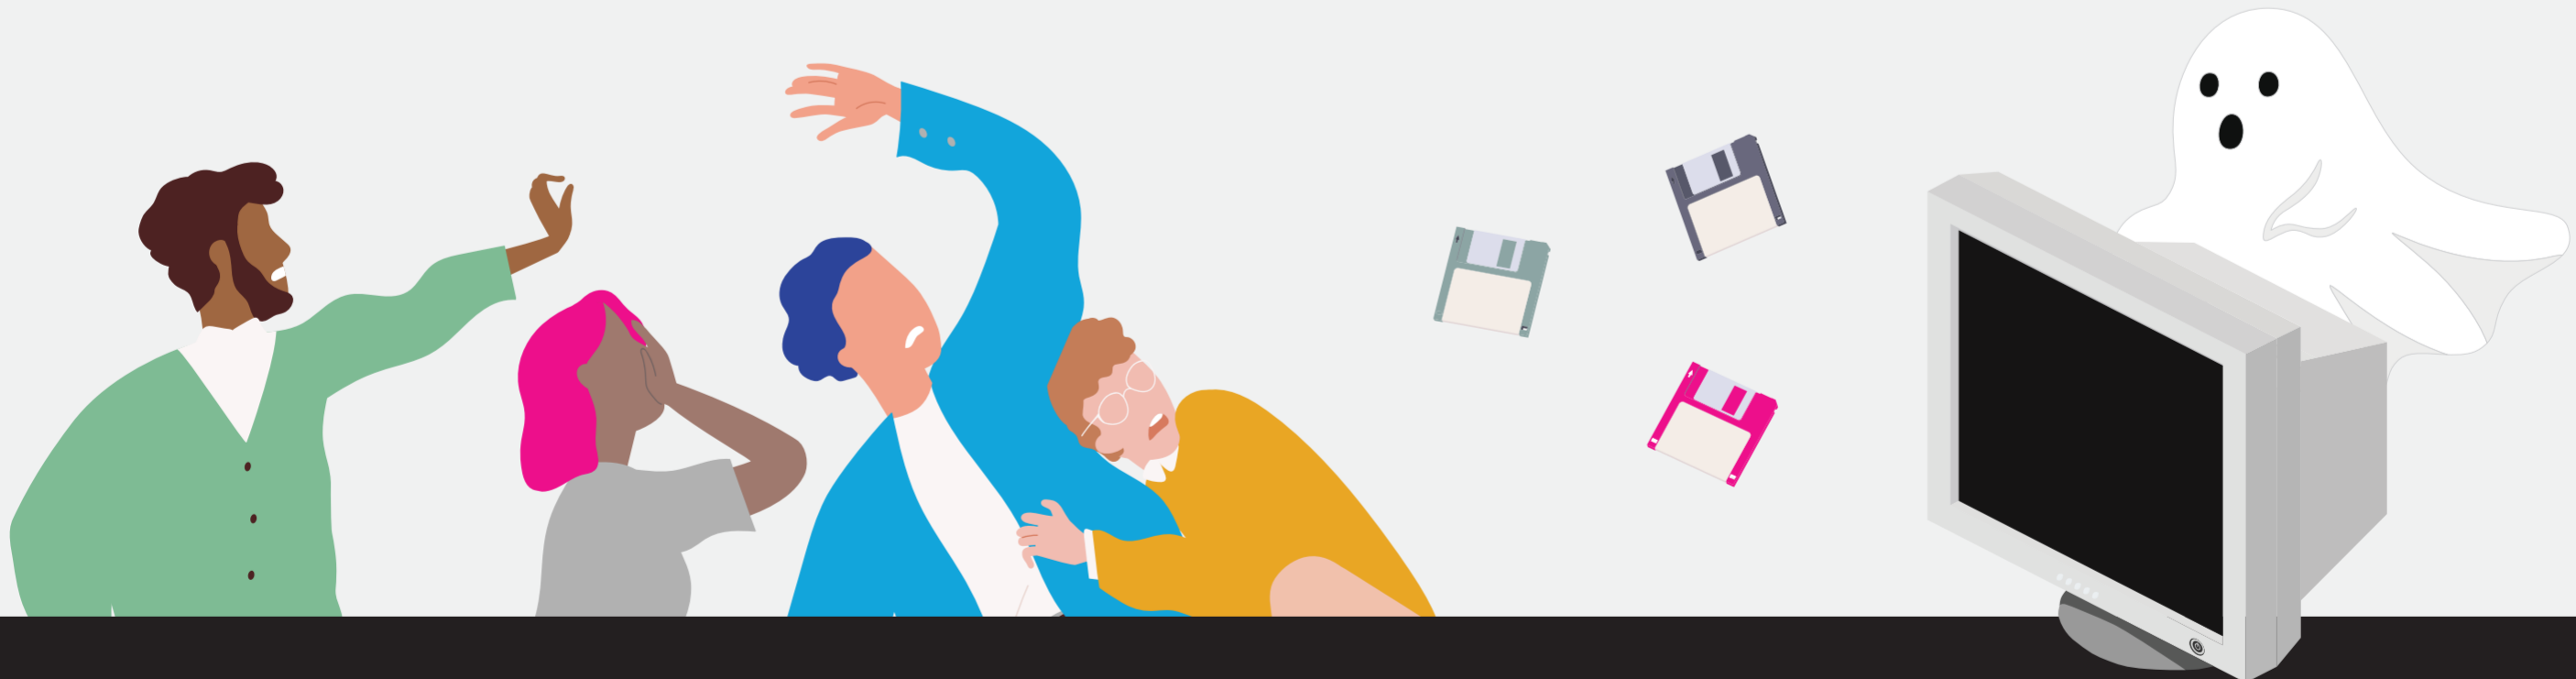

More than half of employees also look favorably at companies that offer social-good programs as part of their benefits packages.

Scary Experience: Disconnected Technology Nightmare

29% of employees say the technology they are missing most at their job is a single system to perform all work functions.

Replace disconnected technology with intelligently connected solutions that remove the need for multiple logins and redundant data entry.
